DAIRY EDUCATION IN INDIA PRESENT STATUS AND FUTURE PROSPECTS

Varinder Pal Singh & Anil Kumar Puniya

The livestock sector is floating for revolution in the developing countries, where major increase in milk production is anticipated in next few decades. Livestock sector contributes about 26.90 % of the total gross domestic product from agricultural sector in India. This sector in addition to regular income, provides house hold nutritional security and employment to small and marginal rural households. This regular source of income has a huge impact on minimising risks to income as income from crop sector is seasonal. It also absorbs the surplus family labour of the farmers and thus helps in earning extra income throughout the year. Moreover, livestock is a security asset to be sold in times of crisis. If we peep inside the livestock sector, dairying is the major enterprise contributing about 2/3rd of the total income from livestock sector. The farmers are intrinsically linked to dairy farming to produce milk and milk products for home consumption and for subsidiary income.

Indian dairy sector has evolved from rags to riches. In the pre-independence era, there was scarcity of milk and there was dependence on imports. Owing to development of dairy sector in various phases of operation flood and de-licensing of dairy industry, India emerged as top milk producing nation. During the year 2017-18, national milk production was recorded at

www.Jobriya.com

176.3 million tonnes (20.12 % of world milk production i.e. 876 million tonnes) far ahead of USA (98.6 million tonnes) and China (39 million tonnes) and it has increased from 31.6 million tonnes during 1980-81. Further, the national level per capita milk availability has increased from 128 g/capita/day during 1980-81 to 375 g/capita/day during 2017-18 with Punjab state topping the table with as high as 1120 g (Fig1).

Milk is a highly perishable food commodity. The number of bacteria multiplies exponentially after the milk is received from the animals. Hence, it requires immediate cooling for keeping the bacterial growth under control. The surplus raw milk should be marketed without any delay so as to maintain the quality of milk. Alternately, the raw milk can be converted into different types of value added milk products having elongated shelf life. The processing of raw milk into milk products enhances the value of raw milk by at least 20-25%, which can go a long way in generating additional income and employment opportunities in the country.

The Indian dairy industry comprises of two sectors i.e. organized sector comprising of cooperative, private and government milk plants and un-organized sector comprising of milk vendors, halwais, creameries etc. To the much surprise, the organized sector is still processing less than a quarter of milk production in India, whereas in developed countries this figure is as high as 90%. The states with large proportion of organized processing are Gujarat (49.1%),

Agriculture is considered as the backbone of our economy. Indian agriculture contributes approximately 17.50 per cent of the country's GDP, provides large scale employment and fulfills the food and nutritional requirements of the nation. It provides important raw materials for several major industries. However, Indian agriculture faces numerous challenges with a rapidly changing business environment, pace of technological change, and global competitive environment. Since couple of decades, agriculture is moving towards commercial orientation and needs to further transition from supply driven to demand driven. New inputs and new technologies are hitting market everyday. In recent pasts, with the proactive initiatives of the Government of India, several new programmes and schemes has been launched to meet the clarian call by the Honorable Prime Minister of 'Doubling Farmers' Income by 2022'. With the rapid urbanisation, demographic changes, and improvement in disposable income, the food basket of the consumers has dramatically changed. Now consumers demand variety of produce round the year and with certain quality. The demand for processed and packaged food products is increasing rapidly, which requires trained manpower to handle the business. Only 14 per cent of total food products are being processed in India, whereas 35 per cent food is wasted during packaging and transportation. Several agri-start ups and agripreneurs have also emerged in the space of service delivery, product and process innovation. Therefore, agri-business management is becoming a popular career choice for the agri-graduates. There is great need to develop the professional agribusiness managers who can, not only fill the management requirements but also prove to be a great support to the farmers.

WHAT IS AGRI- BUSINESS?

Agri-business includes all business enterprises that transact with the farmers and takes the food products and services to the ultimate consumers. The transaction may involve either a product, a commodity or a service and encompasses items such as (a) productive resources e.g. feed, seed, fertilizers equipment, energy, machinery etc. (b) agricultural commodities e.g. food and fibre etc (c) facilitative services e.g. credit, insurance marketing, storage, processing, transportation, packaging, distribution etc.

In a developing country like India, agri-business system with forward and backward linkages consists of four major sectors such as agricultural input, agricultural production, agro-processing and agricultural marketing-distribution. Thus, agri-business is all about how to conduct successful business in the food and agriculture related sectors. Therefore, agri-business management is the application of management principles in agriculture and agri-business sector.

NEED FOR AGRI-BUSINESS EDUCATION

Hon'ble Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi on 27th June 2018, asked leaders of corporate India to create more jobs by investing in housing, micro-irrigation, battery storage, defence and agriculture sectors.

Prime Minister met 41 business leaders representing a wide spectrum of the Indian economy, in Raj Bhavan in Mumbai and said that the government and the private sector must come together to become partners in progress as economy picks up pace. This requires skilled man power in the agricultural and agribusiness sector. The investment of government in infrastructure related to agriculture like Artificial Intelligence, Pradhan Mantri Krishi Fasal Bima Yojana (PMFBY), Pradhan Mantri Krishi Sinchai Yojana (PMKSY) will create huge employment in agricultural sector.

Commercialization of agriculture calls for specialized production, post-harvest management, expansion of processing, transportation, packaging activities and positioning of products both in the domestic as well as international markets. Every year about 20-30 per cent of crop is wasted at farm level in India due to improper handling, spoilage, floods, droughts, pests and diseases and lack of knowledge of post-harvest technologies. In the case of fruits and vegetables, the wastage is around 30 per cent. Certain sectors in India such as floriculture, aquaculture, poultry, processing of fruits and vegetables are reaping the benefits of advanced technology. The agri-business sector encompasses the many activities of agricultural sector under one umbrella like integration of agricultural inputs, agricultural productions, agro-processing and agricultural marketing and trade which add value to the agriculture produce. Nowadays, agri-business has become one of the most important fields in the developing country like India to boost up its economy.

The public, private and cooperative organizations are looking for professionally competent and trained agri-business managers. The managerial skills of meritorious agricultural graduates can be developed by Agricultural Universities (AUs) so that they can prove as effective agri-business manager. At present, there are more than 6000 Farmers Producer Companies (FPCs) in India, however very few are making good business case, due to lack of management expertise. Though, most of the State Agricultural Universities (SAUs) are offering post-graduate programs in agri-business management. There is greater need of quality agri-business education, research and capacity buildings to meet the demand of sunrise sector of agribusiness.

DAIRY EDUCATION...

Maharashtra (40.5%), Karnataka (39.5%) and Tamil Nadu (30.6%). Punjab state having highest milk productivity and highest per capita milk availability, ranks 10th with 10.1 % in organized milk processing. Considering ever increasing demand for quality milk products emanating from increasing urbanization, increasing income levels, changing food habits and increasing health awareness, the level of organized processing of milk need to be enhanced to meet the demand.

Future development of dairy industry is possible only by giving proper importance to the processing of milk and developing right kind of human resource for dairy and food industry. Persons with different levels of education are required for this purpose e.g. diploma, degree, post graduate and doctorate level. Hence, many institutions are offering education in dairying. But, there is lack of awareness among the masses regarding the importance of dairy education in India. Graduation in the field of dairy science is the combination of the five subjects such as Dairy Technology, Dairy Engineering, Dairy Microbiology, Dairy Chemistry, Dairy Economics and Business Management. The objective of dairy technology education is to make available trained human resources to the dairy industry, to educate the milk producers, entrepreneurs and consumers about the quality aspect of milk by imparting short term training in various aspects of milk handling. There is semester system in dairy technology education, where students are taught various related courses for seven semesters and sent to relevant industry for in-plant practical hands on training for complete one semester along with in-plant trainings during summer breaks.

Various state level agricultural or animal sciences universities along with some national institutes are offering degree level courses in dairy technology i.e. B.Tech.(Dairy Technology). The number of institutions offering education in dairy increased from 10 in 1990 to 26 during 2019 which includes a couple of private institutions. The eligibility criteria for admission to dairy technology course is senior secondary (10+2) with physics, chemistry and mathematics (50 % marks in aggregate for general category and 40 % for SC/ST category). In most of the states, the admission is made on the basis of entrance tests common to other agricultural and animal science courses for filling 85 % seats under state quota. The admission is based on the merit of candidate in entrance test. The application forms for these entrance tests are usually available in the month of April every year. The reservation of seats is as per state/central government rules and regulations. Future prospects: The future target of the national milk production is 254.5 million tonnes by 2021-22 and to bring more than 50 % of milk produced under the organized sector for procurement as against the present 25%. To meet these targets and to enhance the milk handling levels, it is necessary to produce professionals, who understand the nature of this highly perishable natural food product. In this scenario, dairy technology education has a lot of scope. After completing B.Tech (Dairy Technology), the pass outs can get employment in various areas like milk procurement, milk processing, milk quality check etc in private as well as cooperative milk plants. They can also get employment in the food industries dealing with functional foods & infant foods and industries dealing with dairy equipment & machinery. Further, by pursuing higher education in various branches of dairy science, the candidates can get employment in teaching, research and extension cadre position in colleges and universities. A number of dairy graduates also join higher studies in dairy and food sciences abroad. Not ending here, the way forward is open in various competitive examinations like civil services, banking etc at par with other graduates.

To sum up, it is worth mentioning here that dairy education is having a bright future having plenty of job opportunities available along with option to pursue higher studies here or abroad. The dairy graduates can also come up as entrepreneurs starting their own business in milk processing creating self-employment as well as creating job opportunities to other skilled and un-skilled persons, thus becoming job providers rather than becoming job seekers. But, there is little knowledge among the new entrants after senior secondary level about this stream. At this stage, a major question arises after parents and students; which stream to join after senior secondary level? They are in such a cross road that making decision out of so many options is not easy one. With the above background, we hope that the dairy education will certainly enter into their choice list and they can plan to try their luck in getting entry to this stream.

UNDERSTANDING BASICS OF ENVIRONMENT-II

Shreya Bhattacharya

A balanced environment is essential for sustainable development, growth and reproduction for all living organisms. All the components required by the organisms are present in the environment. When the balance of the environment gets disturbed for one reason or the other, survival of living organisms becomes difficult. This balance of the environment may be disturbed by the entrance of some harmful and unwanted components in the environment. In this second article of the special series on environment, we will discuss about various types of Environmental pollution and their adverse impact. Environmental pollution is one of the most pressing issues facing humanity and other life forms on the Earth today.

Pollution

Pollution is the introduction of contaminants into the environment that damages it or affects it adversely and cause harm to human beings, animals, plants and other living organisms. Environmental pollution can also be defined as "the contamination of the physical and biological components of the earth/atmosphere system to such an extent that normal environmental processes are adversely affected. It takes place when the environment cannot process and neutralise harmful by-products of human activities like solid industrial wastes or green house gas emissions, in due course without any structural or functional damage to its system. This unfavourable alteration of our surroundings is wholly or largely a by product of man's actions. It adversely affects the usefulness of the resources. Pollution can come in the form of chemical substances as solid, liquid or gaseous substance, or energy such as heat, light or noise.

Pollutants

Substances that cause pollution are known as pollutants. They can be naturally occurring substances or energies, but are considered contaminants when in excess of natural levels. Pollutants can be chemicals like nitrogen oxides or sulphur oxides, geochemical substances like dust or sediment, biological organisms or products, or physical substances like heat, radiation or sound wave that is released by man into the environment with actual or potential adverse, harmful or inconvenient effects. The nature and concentration of pollutant determine the severity of effect of pollution. Ecologically, pollutants can be divided into two types:

1. Degradable or non-persistent pollutants: The pollutants that can be rapidly decomposed by natural processes is called degradable or non-persistent pollutants. E.g.-sewage, paper products, vegetables, juice, seeds and leaves. They are only harmful when present in large quantities within the environment. These pollutants can be broken down into simpler, harmless, substances in nature in due course of time by the action of micro-organisms like certain bacteria.

2. Non-degradable pollutants. Some pollutants can not be decomposed by natural processes are called non-degradable pollutants. They cannot be broken down into simpler, harmless substances in nature. E.g. - plastics, polythene, bags, DDT, insecticides, pesticides, mercury, lead, arsenic, etc.

Classification of pollution

The Environmental pollution can be divided into following types:

1. Air pollution
2. Water pollution
3. Noise Pollution
4. Marine pollution
5. Soil Pollution
6. Thermal pollution
7. Nuclear hazards.

In this article we will discuss two major types of Environmental pollution, namely, air pollution and water pollution.

1. Air Pollution

92 percent of people worldwide do not breathe clean air.

Air pollution costs the global economy $5 trillion every year in welfare costs.

Ground-level ozone pollution is expected to reduce staple crop yields by 26 percent by 2030.

Air pollution is defined as the contamination of the atmosphere by substances present at concentrations above their natural levels and capable of producing adverse effects to humans, other living organisms, and the ecosystem in general. These substances or air pollutants include gases, liquid droplets, and solid particles. They are classified according to the source of emission into two main groups: primary and secondary pollutants.

Primary Pollutants: Pollutants that are emitted directly from either natural events or from human activities are called primary pollutants. The natural events are dust storms; volcano etc and human activities can be emission from vehicles, industrial wastes. About 90% of global air pollution is constituted by five primary pollutants. These are

I. Carbon mono-oxides (CO): Carbon monoxide (CO) is a colourless, odourless and toxic air pollutant, formed when the carbon doesn't completely burn in fuels such as gasoline, natural gas, oil, coal, and wood. It is usually produced by motor vehicles and industry. Carbon monoxide levels are typically highest during cold weather, because cold temperatures make combustion less complete and traps pollutants close to the ground. Carbon monoxide causes harmful health effects. The air pollutant when inhaled, combines with blood haemoglobin to form carboxy haemoglobin at a rate 210 times faster than the oxygen forms oxyhaemoglobin, impairing respiration. It reduces the amount of oxygen reaching the brain, heart and other body's organs and tissues. The high levels of carbon monoxide can even cause death.

II. Hydrocarbons: A hydrocarbon is an organic compound consisting of only hydrogen and carbon atoms. Almost all hydrocarbons occur naturally in crude oils, like petroleum and natural gas, that are considered the driving force for modern civilisation. Some common hydrocarbons are Methane (CH₄), Ethane (C₂H₆), Propane (C₃H₈), Butane (C₄H₁₀), Pentane (C₅H₁₂) and Hexane (C₆H₁₄). Hydrocarbons pose no risk on their own; however, they undergo a chemical reaction when exposed to sunlight or nitrogen oxides, contributing to the greenhouse effect and depletion of the ozone layer. They reduce the photosynthetic ability of plants, increase the risk of respiratory illness in human and animals and also increase cancer rates.

III. Nitrogen oxides: Nitrogen oxides are produced naturally by lightning, and also by microbial processes in soils. However, they are majorly produced in fossil fuel combustion (gasoline and diesel engines) in urban areas, while agricultural practices such as the use of synthetic fertilizers are its main sources in rural areas. Nitrogen oxides have a variety of ill effects on the respiratory system.

IV. Particulate matter: Particulate matter, also known as particle pollution or PM, is a term used for extremely small solid particles and liquid droplets suspended in air. They can be made up of a variety of components including nitrates, sulphates, organic chemicals, metals, soil or dust particles. This pollution arises mainly from motor vehicles, wood burning and industry.

V. Sulphur dioxide: Sulphur dioxide is highly reactive gas with very strong odour. Its main source is anthropogenic and is formed by fossil fuel combustion at power plants and other industrial facilities. Natural processes like volcanic eruptions, decomposition and combustion of organic matter, release sulphur gases. It contributes to the formation of particulate matter pollution. Sulphur dioxide irritates the lining of the nose, throat and lungs and may worsen existing respiratory illness especially asthma. It has also been found to exacerbate cardiovascular diseases.

Secondary Pollutants: A secondary pollutant is an air pollutant formed in the atmosphere as a result of the chemical or the physical interactions between the primary pollutants themselves or between the primary pollutants and other atmospheric components. Examples are ground-level ozone, acid rain and nutrient enrichment compounds.

I. Ground-level ozone:

Hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides combine in the presence of sunlight and stagnant air to form Ozone. It is a colourless, highly irritating gas with sweet smell. Its exposure may cause premature mortality and major health issues. Ozone also affects vegetation, crop productivity and damages synthetic materials and textiles such as cotton and polyester.

II. Acid rain: Acid rain is a form of precipitation with acidic components, such as sulfuric or nitric acid that fall to the ground from the atmosphere in wet or dry forms. This can include rain, snow, fog, hail or even dust that is acidic. The wind carries the acidic compounds into the air, and they later fall to the ground in either dry or wet form. On the ground, acid rain damages plants and trees and increases the acidity levels of soils and bodies of water, causing damage to ecosystems. Acid rain also causes decay to buildings and can irritate the eyes and airways.

2. Water Pollution: Water pollution is the contamination of water bodies such as lakes, rivers, oceans and so on, with toxic substances or pollutants that get dissolved in them, lying suspended in the water or depositing on the bed. This degrades the quality of water. Surface water and groundwater are the two types of water resources that pollution affects. There are also two different ways in which pollution can occur.

I. Point-source pollution:

When pollution comes from a single location, such as a discharge pipe attached to a factory, it is known as point-source pollution. Other examples of point source pollution include an oil spill from a tanker, a discharge from factory chimney, or someone pouring oil from their car down a drain. When point-source pollution enters the environment, the place most affected is usually the area immediately around the source.

II. Diffuse or Non-point source pollution: When pollution occurs, not from one single source, but from many different scattered sources, this is called nonpoint-source pollution. Much of the marine pollution is non-point and therefore comes from multiple sources.

Main sources of water pollution

- ◆ Sewage
- ◆ Nutrients
- ◆ Waste water
- ◆ Industrial waste
- ◆ Chemical waste
- ◆ Radioactive waste
- ◆ Oil pollution
- ◆ Plastics

The most polluting of them are the sewage and industrial waste discharged into the rivers. The facilities to treat waste water are not adequate in our country, and the major quantity is discharged into our water bodies. Due to this, pollutants enter groundwater, rivers, and other water bodies. The highly contaminated and disease carrying water eventually ends up in our households. Agricultural runoff, or the water from the fields that drains into rivers, is another major water pollutant as it contains fertilizers and pesticides. While discussing water pollution, it is pertinent to talk about a few important concepts like Dissolved Oxygen, Biochemical Oxygen Demand (BOD) and Chemical Oxygen Demand (COD). The water system produces as well as consumes oxygen. Running water, because of its churning, dissolves more oxygen than still water. Respiration by aquatic animals, decomposition, and various chemical reactions consume oxygen. Waste water from sewage treatment plants often contains organic materials that are decomposed by micro organisms, which use oxygen in the process. Oxygen is measured in its dissolved form as dissolved oxygen (DO). If more oxygen is consumed than is produced, dissolved oxygen levels decline and some sensitive animals may move away, weaken, or die. DO is an important parameter in assessing water quality because of its influence on the organisms living within a body of water. A dissolved oxygen level that is too high or too low can harm aquatic life and affect water quality. Water having DO content below 8.0 mg L⁻¹ is considered as contaminated, while DO content below 4.0 mg L⁻¹ is considered to be highly polluted. Water pollution by organic wastes is measured in terms of Biochemical Oxygen Demand (BOD). BOD is the amount of dissolved oxygen used by microorganisms in the biological process of metabolizing organic matter in water. BOD is directly proportional to the quantity of the organic matter in water bodies. Greater BOD implies the lower amount of dissolved oxygen available for higher animals such as fishes. One of the main reasons for treating wastewater prior to its discharge into a water resource is to lower its BOD-i.e., reduce its need of oxygen and thereby lessen its demand from the streams, lakes, rivers, or estuaries into which it is released. As BOD is limited to biodegradable matter only, it is not considered as a reliable method of measuring water pollution. A better way to measure water pollution is Chemical oxygen demand (COD). It is the amount of oxygen necessary to oxidise all of the organic carbon completely to CO₂ and H₂O. The COD test uses a strong chemical oxidising agent (potassium dichromate or potassium permanganate) to chemically oxidise the organic material in the sample of wastewater under conditions of heat and strong acid.
